For the Birds (and Squirrels!)

In Jonathan Greiner's middle school science class students have been learning about animals' habitats and the things we need to live. They discussed that we have habitats all around the world and even right in our own backyards. The class learned how animals can thrive in our cities, parks, and urban areas around us. The middle school students took on the task of helping the local birds find food in our city by making bird feeders to hang in their yards. The students used toilet paper tubes, honey, bird seed and string. Students and staff took the feeders home over the
